I have come to realize that most of my correspondents want to acquire a copy of his [now outrageously priced] book that carries the same name but a substantially higher price tag than my pamphlet, Me And My Likker.

Me and My Likker: Marvin "Popcorn" Sutton booklet

In my (admittedly very limited) experience, there are two kinds of moonshine: the hellish and the treacherous. The hellish, of course, is immediately recognizable by taste, like drinking (and usually eventually vomiting) liquid fire. In fact, I'd wager to say that, no matter the route, moonshine tends to exit the body with a trademark burn.

Sutton then wrote a self-published autobiography and guide to moonshine production called Me and My Likker, and began selling copies of it in 1999 out of his junk shop in Maggie Valley. [3] [9] [10] The New York Times later called it "a rambling, obscene, and often hilarious account of his life in the trade". [3] (
